INTRODUCTION

This report presents the first results from the 2001 Census in Scotland. It contains final figures of the resident population as at Census Day, 29 April 2001, after adjusting for estimated under-enumeration in the Census. In addition, the report contains the Registrar General's mid-year estimates of the population as at 30 June 2001. Data for both 2001 Census and mid-2001 estimates are given for council area by five-year age groups and sex.

2001 CENSUS RESULTS

The resident population of Scotland on Census Day (29 April 2001) was 5,062,011, of which 52 per cent were female and 48 per cent were male. Children aged 15 and under accounted for 19 per cent of the population, people of working age (16-59F/64M) accounted for 62 per cent, and people of retirement age (60F/65M +) accounted for the remaining 19 per cent.

The Census Day population in the United Kingdom was 58.8 million. Of this, 83.6 per cent were resident in England, 8.6 per cent in Scotland, 4.9 per cent in Wales and 2.9 per cent in Northern Ireland. More information on the Census results in England & Wales can be found in the Office for National Statistics publication 'Census 2001 First Results on Population for England and Wales' or on their website at www.statistics.gov.uk; and information on the Northern Irish Census results can be found in the publication 'Northern Ireland Census 2001 Population Report and Mid-Year Estimates' published by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency or from their website at www.nisra.gov.uk.

More detail on the Census Day resident population broken down by single year of age and sex for Scotland can be found in Table 1, while Table 2 gives counts by five-year age group and sex for each council area. As this publication also presents population figures for mid-2001, discussion of the figures by area is covered in the section on the 2001 mid-year estimates.

The Census results have been adjusted to take account of estimated undercoverage in the Census based on the One Number Census methodology, which used the results of the Census Coverage Survey (see Appendix 1 for more detail on the One Number Census). As a result of the adjustments for underenumeration and changes to the definition of the resident population, it is not appropriate to compare directly the results from the 2001 Census with earlier Censuses (see Appendix 1 for more information on comparability with the 1991 Census).

2001 MID-YEAR ESTIMATES

After each Census the Registrar General prepares a new set of 'base' mid-year population estimates. These estimates are derived from the Census counts of residents, but adjustments have to be made to allow for population change between Census Day and 30 June.

The latest mid-year estimates (Table 3) refer to 30 June 2001 whereas the Census results refer to population counts on Census Day, 29 April 2001. It was, therefore, necessary to recalculate ages with reference to 30 June, and to make allowances for births, deaths, and migration occurring in the intervening nine weeks (see Table 4). These changes added 2,200 to the population of Scotland, which is attributable to a net in-flow of 2,500 migrants in the nine-week period, partially offset by a natural decrease of 300 (births minus deaths) in the period.

Commentary on the 2001 Mid-Year Estimates

The estimated population of Scotland on 30 June 2001 was 5,064,200. This is some 50,400 less than the 2000 mid-year estimates published in April 2001. The fall from the 2000 figure does not represent change in a single year since the previous 2000 estimate was derived by "rolling forward" the 1991 population taking account of births, deaths and migration. Given the new baseline established by the 2001 Census, it will be necessary to revise previous population estimates. In order to provide an indicator of recent change in the population, which may be particularly useful if calculating rates per head, a set of provisionally revised 2000 mid-year estimates has been produced and these are shown in the components of change table in Table 5. Further information on this provisionally revised set of estimates and how they were calculated is given in Appendix 2.

Population change on this basis between 2000 and 2001 is summarised for council areas in Table 5. This shows an increase of 6,000 in the population between 2000 and 2001, which arises principally because of asylum seekers included in the migration estimates for 2000-01 for Glasgow City. Table 6 gives population details by sex and five-year age group for council areas of Scotland on 30 June 2001 and Table 7 gives information on land areas and population densities. The latter shows that population density ranges from 8 persons per square kilometre in Highland to 3,298 persons per square kilometre in Glasgow City.

Comparisons with 1981

A revised series of population estimates for Scotland covering the period 1982-2000 will be produced (see Appendix 3). Estimates for 1981 will not be affected, and this section identifies some of the key changes in Scotland's population between 1981 and 2001. Further commentary on Scotland's changing population will be included in the Registrar General's Annual Report for 2001 (to be published on 30 October 2002).

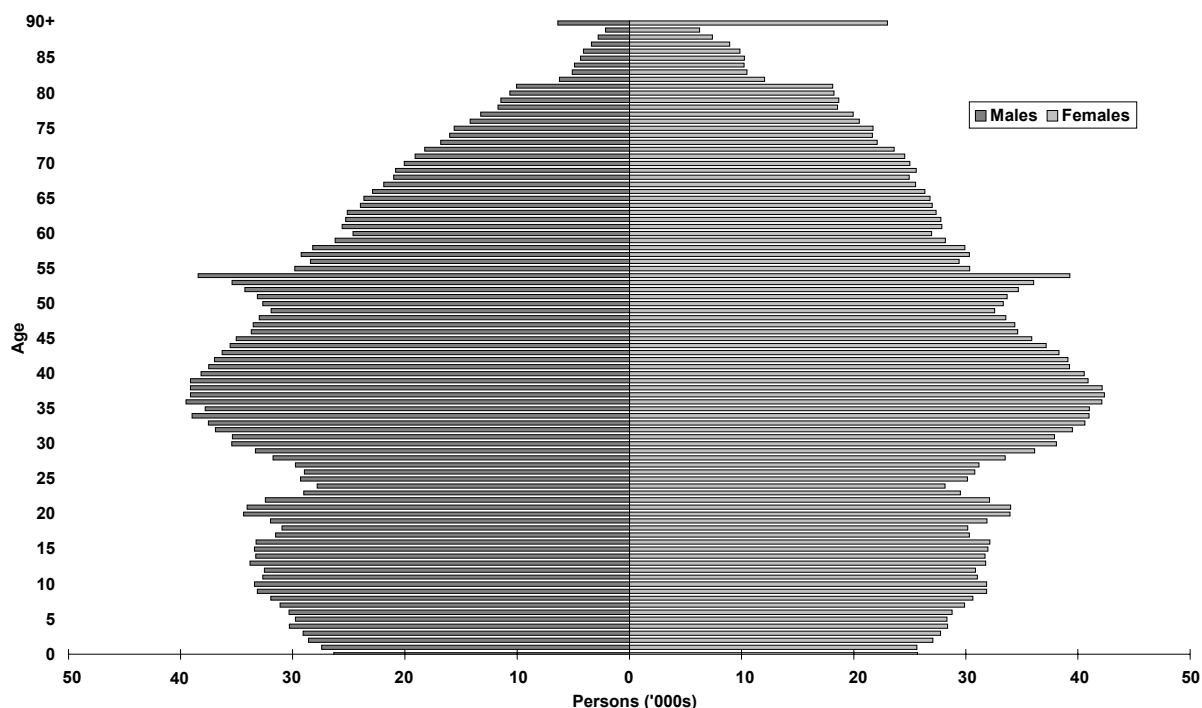

The population of Scotland has fallen by about 2 per cent over the past 20 years, a decrease of some 116,000 since 1981. Figure 1 below illustrates how the age structure of the population of Scotland has changed in that time. Of particular note are the decrease of 18 per cent in the number of children under 15 and the increase of 29 per cent in the numbers aged 75 and over. Table 3 gives more detail of the population of Scotland by age and sex on 30 June 2001.

Figure 2 gives the age structure of the population for both males and females. This shows clearly the ageing of the population and the transfer into their 30s of the 1960s baby bulge. The 2001 data shows the effect of improvements in mortality at older ages, increasing the number of the most elderly, while the further reduction in the number of births in recent years is also evident.

NOTES, DEFINITIONS AND MAPS

Population covered

The coverage of the population in an area is the same for the 2001 Census and the mid-year population estimates. It includes all those usually resident there whatever their nationality. Students are treated as being resident at their term-time address. Members of HM and non-UK armed forces stationed in Scotland are included; HM forces stationed outside Scotland are excluded.

Age

Population counts in the Census tables (Table 1 and 2) relate to age last birthday as at Census Day, 29 April 2001. Mid-year population estimates relate to 30 June of the year shown and ages relate to age last birthday at that date.

Presentation of the results

Although the populations are tabulated in units, this does not imply accuracy to that level. The data are presented in units for the convenience of users wishing to compile non-standard aggregations without encountering rounding problems.

Land area

The land areas used to calculate the population density information presented in Table 7 were Standard Area Measurements as supplied by Ordnance Survey.

APPENDIX 1

2001 Census method

The One Number Census process

Following the 1991 Census, it was acknowledged that the Census suffered from a degree of undercount, the extent and nature of which was not identified by the 1991 Census Validation Survey. As a result the detailed 1991 Census tables were not consistent with the final estimate of 1991 Census Day population. To avoid a similar situation following the 2001 Census, the Census Coverage Survey (CCS) and the One Number Census (ONC) projects were initiated.

The 2001 CCS was an intensive enumeration of a representative sample of postcodes in Scotland and was designed to be independent of the Census and provide the ONC Project with the required data to estimate underenumeration. The ONC project derives its name from the intention to eliminate different population counts so that all Census outputs add to one number – the national population estimate that has been adjusted for undercounting. The ONC project ensured that the most appropriate estimation procedures were used to calculate the final Census data.

More detail on the conduct of the One Number Census is available on the GROS website.

Comparability with the 1991 Census

Given the approach taken to estimating underenumeration in the 2001 Census, it is not appropriate to compare the 2001 Census results directly with the 1991 Census results. This is because the 2001 Census results cover the whole population but the 1991 Census results did not. A comparison of the coverage achieved in the 1991 and 2001 Censuses is presented in the table below.

Comparison of Census coverage in the 1991 and 2001 Censuses		percentage
	1991	2001
Enumerated in the Census	96.9	96.1
People identified as missing and included in Census results	1.2	3.9
Census coverage of the population	98.1	100
Missing but not included in Census results	1.9	0
Total	100	100

The level of actual census enumeration was similar in 1991 and 2001, 96.9 per cent compared with 96.1 per cent, respectively. But, as the table shows, the 2001 Census results cover the whole population compared with 98.1 per cent coverage in the 1991 Census. The difference in coverage lies in the approach to estimating under-enumeration in the two Censuses.

In 1991 the Census method allowed enumerators to identify many occupied households where the people within them had not returned a form and include an allowance for them in the Census tables. This gave an overall coverage of 98.1 per cent.

The method did not enable enumerators to identify people missed from households where a form was returned nor to make an allowance for any occupied households that they failed to locate. Using data from administrative sources and the 1991 Census Validation Survey it was estimated that these people accounted for about 1.9 per cent of the population. These were not added to the Census tables.

In the 2001 Census, the Census Coverage Survey methodology allowed for both types of missing people to be adjusted for in the Census tables. Table A1 shows the proportion of people identified as missing and added to the Census by sex in each council area.

Census confidentiality

The Registrar General has a legal obligation not to reveal information collected in confidence in the Census about individual people and households. Protecting the Census data is of key importance and steps have been taken to safeguard confidentiality and protect against disclosure of personal information provided on the Census form. Further information is given in 'Scotland's Census – A guide to the results and how to obtain them'.

Provisionally revised 2000 mid-year estimates

A set of provisionally revised 2000 mid-year estimates, Table 5, has been produced to provide a realistic indicator of population change over the year 2000 to 2001. These were calculated by 'rolling back' the 2001 mid-year estimates, i.e., the 2001 population was reduced by a single year of age at each age and sex, deaths in the previous 12 months were added, births were subtracted and an estimate of migration was subtracted to arrive at a provisional revised set of 2000 mid-year estimates. These are considered provisional revisions as further revisions may occur once the revised series for 1982-2000 is produced, see Appendix 3.

This provisional revised 2000 mid-year estimate is some 56,400 less than the previous 2000 mid-year estimate published by the Registrar General in April 2001. The difference between the previous mid-2000 estimate and the provisionally revised 2000 estimate is most apparent in males between the ages of 20-39. At the older ages (60 and over), the provisionally revised estimates tend to be higher than the previous 2000 estimate.

Table A2 shows the differences between the two population estimates by council area. The councils with the largest overestimate in the previously published 2000 figures are Glasgow (5.9%) 36,000 high, Renfrewshire (2.1%) 3,700 high and North Lanarkshire (2.1%) 6,800 high. Councils with the greatest underestimate in the previously published 2000 figures are Dundee City (3.0%) 4,300 low, Argyll & Bute (2.9%) 2,600 low and Moray (2.3%) 1,900 low.

Reasons for the difference

It is expected that the difference of some 56,000 between the previously published and the provisionally revised 2000 mid-year estimates is largely attributable to errors in previous estimates of migration in the eighties and nineties. It has been well documented that migration is the most difficult component of population change to estimate because of the lack of a wholly reliable source of data on migration. Estimates of net migration are the difference between large flows of migrants into and out of Scotland based on survey data (International Passenger Survey), or, for movements within the UK, from available administrative data (National Health Service Central Register recording the moves of patients throughout the UK). These estimates of net migration will, therefore, be very sensitive to measurement error in the flows in each direction and even more sensitive for particular age/sex groups.

For Scotland there are two key flows of migrants: migrants to and from the rest of the UK; and migrants to and from the rest of the world. Annually these two estimates have flows of about 50,000 each way with the rest of the UK and about 20,000 each way with the rest of the world. The estimates of international flows will be subject to greater error given the small sample sizes and the inherent non-sampling errors that exist in most surveys. However, both flows will contribute to the difference and the work to revise the population estimates back to 1982 will attempt to identify the interaction of these different flows. Some preliminary investigations suggest that the error is more likely to be the result of underestimating out-migration rather than overestimating in-migration, i.e. more people leaving Scotland than originally estimated.

The errors in estimating migration in the eighties will also have affected the adjustments made to 1991 Census counts to take account of underenumeration. The adjustments to 1991 Census counts were incorrect and added some people, particularly young men, to the population whom we now believe had actually migrated out of Scotland rather than having been missed by the 1991 Census.

Revised series of population estimates

A detailed study of the data used in the construction of the population estimates series for the 1990s and 1980s will now be carried out. This work will be an important input to the preparation of a revised population series for Scotland for the years 1982-2000 to provide a consistent time series between the 1981 and 2001 figures. Additionally, these analyses may suggest methodological improvements that can be made in preparing estimates of migration which would be incorporated in future estimates of the population. A revised set of population estimates for 1982-2000 will be available in February 2003.

Other work on quality

The lack of a reliable source of data from which to estimate international migration is a particular concern, and a UK National Statistics project has been initiated to review the quality of international migration statistics. This project will review the data and methods with the aim of recommending improved approaches to measuring these migration flows, and is scheduled to report in 2003.

In addition, further work will be undertaken to examine migration between England & Wales and Scotland with the aim of improving the estimates of migration between the countries, particularly for young men where it is thought to be most deficient. This will be partially covered by work reconstructing the population series for the eighties and nineties and it is hoped that some improvements can be implemented before the 2002 mid-year estimates to be published in April 2003.

Population projections

A set of 2002-based projections, which take account of the 2001 Census, is planned for publication in November 2003. The 2000-based population projections for Scotland and its administrative areas, published by the Registrar General earlier this year, used the previously published 2000 mid-year estimates as a base, which are some 56,000 higher than the provisionally revised 2000 mid-year estimates published in Table A2. While the 2000-based projections are in need of updating, the general picture of a slowly declining population is still relevant. To obtain revised projections which take account of the results from the 2001 Census prior to the availability of the 2002-based projections, it may be best to apply the previously projected percentage changes to the provisionally revised 2000 population base.
